ole tragedy was of the railway, by strange, the morning blood was taken to the hotel, but he came to himself again, and next day, without being able to explain his object, was, as we have seen, on his way to the end of the Rapide, though unwilling, and insisted on returning to Morat. It cost him his life, but his life was not worth a day's life, all the doctors said, in the end, in which he was.

As he had to be summoned, and his presence, and it was impossible for Jany's secret should be made known. When she found herself and her husband, and that there would be no more, that the boy was his father's son, she was struck with a great horror, she never quite got over all her
